

This list aims to give information on tramway stopping places on the London tramway system generally during the period of operation by the London Passenger Transport Board and London Transport until final abandonment. This first issue, however, generally relates to the tram system c.1950, being based on the master plans kept by London Transport and consulted by myself in the early 1960's. The sheets are undated but most of them cover the period from the War to abandonment as few sections closed earlier are shown. Some, however, appear to date from prior to the formation of LPTB with details of repositioned/discontinued stops from around 1930. The sheet covering the Westminster-Waterloo area was unfortunately missing. Any information on this area and routes abandoned before the War would be welcomed and included in a future issue of this list. Post-war routes 6, 22/24, 28, 31, 40, 60, 62, 66 and 78 are not shown separately, all roads being covered by the routes listed.

Tramway stops were unnamed unless they were fare stages, time points or referred to in other publicity. The names given below, therefore, unless within these categories, relate to their location.

There <sup>are two</sup> important exceptions to this. On 20th March 1935 a revised system of compulsory and request stops was introduced experimentally on route 27 between Euston Road and Seven Sisters. A publicity leaflet was issued giving locations and names of the stops. Although this route was closed before the War, this information is given below prior to the main lists. The experiment was considered a success and led to a general review of stopping places throughout the LPTB area. On busy main roads some stops were discontinued and others repositioned, sometimes resulting in a significant stagger between stops in opposite directions nominally serving the same point. <sup>Only one</sup> other publicity leaflet similar to Route 27 <sup>is</sup> known to exist, <sup>Aldgate to Barking, Route 67.</sup> <sup>See page 13</sup>

Some information is included on fare stages listed in the LCC 1911 Tramways Guide. Names shown thus (xxx) relate to stops discontinued/relocated by the 1930's.
